Dear Ms. Laurel Ross,

The online form I am supposed to use to comment does not download on my computer so I will comment this way. I don't know whether this will be acceptable to you, but I will send it anyway.

I think the two-tier system of electricity rates is most unfair for those with several people living in one home. We have four children at home and we have no hope of ever keeping our rate at the lower tier. Although it is far more "green" and environmental friendly to share a home with several people, those who live alone or have few people in the home have quite an advantage with the two-tier system. Couldn't the number of residents in the home be considered?

Thank you,

Laurel Dennison
